Description:

This is a memoir about an American woman doing her Ph.D. research in Zimbabwe from 1992 to 1996....and so much more! Supported by a Rockefeller grant to conduct research for her dissertation at Indiana University, Natalie Kreutzer stayed to create and pioneer the country's first-ever music degree at the University of Zimbabwe. Poised above the South African border, she witnessed that country's transition from an apartheid state to the Rainbow Nation. But this is not Goody-two-shoes goes to Africa. Along the way of working with rural Shona-speaking women and socializing with ANC and PAC patriots from South Africa, interactions with local mobsters and the police, Natalie falls in love. Her story of personal love and loss adds a unique touch to her research story. With an Indiana farm girl's affinity for nature, she creates images of landscape and wildlife. A sprinkling of words from the Shona language enlivens the narrative. The reader is left with a sense of people and place. Natalie is very much present in every page, and the reader will find her adventurous, courageous, strongly principled, and sometimes breathtakingly impulsive--all of which motivates us to loyalty and heart-felt support.

I read the first line of the memoir. I always get divorced on April 1st and I was instantly hooked. I eagerly read the author's story of her time in Zimbabwe, in the 1990s, when political and social transitions were occurring there and in neighboring South Africa. Natalie skillfully weaves events from her former life throughout the story of her work to study the acquisition of song in Shona children, and the creation of a music degree program at the University of Zimbabwe. The author's talent and work ethic are understated in this humorous and touching tale of her relationships and daily life in her adopted country, so different from the Indiana farm where she grew up. One of the anecdotes I loved was about newly elected president Nelson Mandela opening the Harare Agricultural Show. Dr. Kreutzer describes the singing and dancing, and how Mandela himself danced away from the podium. This book immerses the reader in the culture of Zimbabwe and makes me want to dance!
